Ray Sirois - Director of Technology - H2M architects + engineers

Greg Kumm - Prosurance Brokerage Assoc. Inc.

Too often when disputes arise, firms are unfairly held accountable because the evidence absolving them cannot be located. In this panel discussion, company principals and an experienced litigator frame the problem, identify causes, and share pointers derived from experience.

Much of the problem arises from projects becoming more complex, project records ballooning in volume, and deadlines coming faster than ever. A new look at a firm's processes and supporting technologies, such as best practices in email and project data management, shows how firms can protect their reputations and their businesses.

Improved project information management offers the added benefit of getting things right the first time, resulting in structures that conform to the design intent and create safer environments for workers and occupants.

Find out how to tackle these evolving challenges while maintaining the level of service your clients deserve.

- Learn how to technology can foster a more collaborative work environment and reduce conflicts between architects and engineers.
- Learn how to work more efficiently across team and company lines on complex projects.
- Discuss how design professionals are working smarter and how that translates to profitability.
- Share best practices with industry veterans and colleagues .
